the National Baseball Hall of Fame(棒球名人堂), in Cooperstown, New York. This museum has many special items from baseball's history. Visitors will find the original gloves and bats used by some of the game's greatest players. People can also watch their favorite players' best games, as well as other highlights of their careers.

The Hall of Fame is not only special for visitors, but players, too. Every year, members of the Baseball Writers' Association of America(全美棒球記者協會, BBWAA) vote to put new players into the Hall of Fame. To get into the Hall, players must have played baseball for ten years. They must also have stopped playing for at least five years before BBWAA members can vote for them. Since there are so many players in history, getting elected (獲選) is very difficult. If someone does get in, a big event is held to celebrate. Thousands of fans will come listen to them speak about their best years playing baseball. In the end, the player will receive the honor of getting their picture put in the Hall of Fame forever.
