When we get wet(弄濕), we need a towel(毛巾) to get dry(乾). When a dog is 19, it needs to shake(搖動) its body.

A study in 2010 showed that a wet dog can throw off half the water on its body by shaking for less than a second. In fact, this common (普遍的) act of dogs works better than a washing machine. During a shake, the animal's head, body and skin all move. The study also showed that smaller animals must shake 20 than bigger animals to get water off. 21, in one second, a rat can shake 18 times, a dog 6 times, and a bear 4 times. As for (至於) bigger animals, they can make their 22 dry with fewer shakes.

In the animal world, how fast(多快) an animal can run often decides whether (是否) it will live or not. For animals, shaking is also about their 23. Being wet makes animals heavier, and that makes it harder to run. And animals may be eaten (被吃掉) by lions or tigers. Maybe that's why the "wet-dog shake" has become a common habit of many animals.

Reading Habits Are Changing Now

A study showed people in Wonderland read less and spent less on books in 2018 than they did in 2014. In 2014, people above 18 years old spent 3.6 hours per week reading books, and in 2018, the time went down to 2.2 hours. On average(平均而言), people of this age group read 2.01 books per month in 2014, and the number went down to 1.5 in 2018.

Why did people spend less time on books? Many people believe it was because of the Internet. The study found these people spent 1.28 hours on the Internet every day in 2014, and the time went up to 1.44 in 2018.

In the study, people were also asked(被問到) about their favorite places to read when they did open a book. Most people said they liked to read at home (68.1%), in the library (17.1%) and public places (13%). Only 1.6% of the people read on the bus, the train or the MRT.

There was one more question— why did they read? The top three reasons(原因) were to get knowledge(知識) (64.9%), to have fun and relax (放鬆)(32.2%), and to find more to talk with friends (19.3%).
